MODEL HOMES FOR MODEST INCOMES.

A Plan to Minimize the Expense and Drudgery of Housekeeping.

A good many ambitious people who are struggling along on modest incomes will not be surprised to hear that Mrs. Coleman-Stuckert, a bright Denver woman, has concluded that it costs altogether too much to live. That proposition is indisputable. It may surprise as well as please them, however, to learn that Mrs. Coleman-Stuckert has devised a system of "model homes" which will not only diminish the expense and labor of housekeeping, but increase the comforts and conveniences of home.

Mrs. Coleman-Stuckert has been explaining her system to the faculty of Chicago university, and they will probably give the plan a trial. Other communities of Chicagoans are also interested in the scheme, and we are likely to soon have in the Lake City one or more practical exemplifications of the "model homes" theory. This is Mrs. Coleman-Stuckert's plan, briefly explained:

Around the outside of a block of land are to be erected 44 houses, all connected so as to form a square of buildings, with fronts of pressed brick and stone trimmings, tastefully constructed and varied in style of architecture. Each house will have either two or three stories, and none will be more than two rooms deep, so as to afford ample light and abundant fresh air. In the central court will be erected a large two-story building, where will be located the kitchen, laundry and cold storage plant and the dynamo and improved heating apparatus for supplying electric light and steam heat for the 44 homes. On the second floor of this building will be a kindergarten, and a library, and a large hall, which can be utilized for many purposes.

The "model homes" will all be connected with the central building by speaking tubes or telephones, and an electric conduit for carrying the hampers to and from the kitchen. The refuse and dirty dishes will be sent back to the central kitchen to be washed, unless the families own handsome china-ware, in which case it will remain in the home, where it can be washed in a portable sink provided for the purpose. Thus the housewife is spared the worry and trouble of preparing her own meals and washing the dishes. The central building is to be provided also with a large dining hall, where those who prefer to do so can eat their meals, and where large dinner parties can be given.

The cook, the engineer, the laundryman, the electrician and their assistants will all be trained experts in their respective lines, as the community can afford to pay good salaries for their services. Large and comfortable sleeping rooms, etc., will be provided in the central building for the skilled employees. The space inclosed by the block of houses and on either side of the central building can be used for lawn tennis and croquet grounds. And around the inside plat of ground will be a raised promenade, which will be provided with rustic seats here and there, and on the corners of which will be erected small summer houses.

The affairs of this model community will be managed by a board of directors elected by the home owners. According to Mrs. Stuckert, all the comforts of the finest private homes can be enjoyed for less than half the usual cost for the same kind of service. She claims that the table expenses, with a very liberal bill of fare, will amount to but $2 per capita per week.

THE FASHION PLATE.
Pretty summer dresses are made of cream tinted Indian muslins embroidered in delicate colors.
Pink beiges, cornflower, blue and red, with a violet tinge which softens its tone, are very fashionable colors.
Tyrolese is the name of a hat with an indented crown which is to supersede the sailor. It is trimmed with a broad black ribbon band and a stiff bow and two quills at one side.
Two flexible steels are sometimes put in the edge of dress skirts to give them the desired flare, and a plaited flounce of stiff muslin is added at the waist to throw the fullness out.

Ribbons are the one special feature of decoration on thin gowns, and the latest Parisian fancy is to have a bow, with long ends which reach nearly to the hem of the skirt, fastened at one side of the yoke.
A novel way to freshen a white silk gown is to cover it with a tunic of colored transparent gauze. It can be made in one piece, finished around the neck with a full bertha and drawn in at the waist with a belt.

The silk petticoat has become an article of artistic elegance, made of rich brocades and moire silks and trimmed with lace covered ruffles and flounces of chiffon, and is almost as important an item of dress as the gown which is worn over it.

Tulle cravats are worn with the tulle trimmed hats and are made with two large rosettes, instead of the bow which has prevailed so long. An extreme fancy for giving breadth to the revers and keeping them in place is carried out by putting a slender whalebone in the upper edge.—New York Sun.

NEW COIFFURES AND JEWELS.

In the center is a neat and stylish coiffure. The feature of it is the fetching velvet tea cap that surmounts the pretty girl's head. Two other examples of prevailing modes in hairdressing are also shown. Among the new shapes in jewelry the preference seems to be for opal centers with pearls. The necklace has pearls set in threes. Amber and tourmaline are seen often with pearls.

Advice to a Young Man.

"I want you to advise me, Miss Barker-son," said the young South Side exquisite. "I am going to take a lady to the theater this evening, and after it's over I expect to give her a nice lunch at some swell restaurant. What had I better order?"

"You want a 'swell' luncheon, I suppose," said the society belle. "Regular swell. Way up."

"You are not particular as to the expense?"

"Want it got up regardless."

"And you want to do the proper thing?"

"That's it exactly."

"Well," observed the young woman thoughtfully, "suppose you ask the lady what she would like."—Chicago Tribune.

The Travelers Grieved.

—Life.

Knew What He Wanted.
My old friend, the Indian slayer, who used to intimidate Old-Hand-Full-of-Clouds and the rest of his tribe, has lived in Minneapolis for a few years back and has a charming little home not far from Forest avenue.

The neighborhood is a pleasant one, and my old friend is a great favorite, especially with the children.
One of our neighbors has a cute little son, just old enough to ask hard questions and make embarrassing remarks before company, and who is noted for his neat Fauntleroy appearance.

He dropped in on my old friend the other day, and sitting down quietly folded his hands and seemed waiting for some troublesome ideas to form themselves in his mind.

Finally he looked up and asked, "Say, do I look dirty?"

"Why, no," said my old friend, whom we will call captain for short.
"Well, we're awfully poor anyway."

The captain said he was sorry, but that most people were feeling the hard times.
"We haven't even got a horse."

The captain expressed his sympathy and said there were lots of people in the same fix.

"And we haven't got a cow neither."

This evoked some other sympathetic reply from the captain.

"And we haven't got any pigs."

It was getting somewhat monotonous, but still the captain made a proper response.

"And we haven't even got a dog or a cat."

This the captain endeavored to make him think was a blessing, but the child continued:

"And we haven't got any hens or chickens."

At this the captain began to think the young man was not sufficiently cognizant of the blessings he had, and so he thought he would call the lad's attention to some of the things he had to be thankful for, so he got the floor and commenced:

"But, my son, think how much you have that a good many little boys do not have. There's your good mother, who loves you so dearly and would do anything to make her little boy happy."

"Yes," interrupted the little fellow, "but I'd rather she were a hen, and then she could lay eggs for us to eat."

This was too much for the captain, and he retired from the field, convinced that in the present mood at least his words would have but little effect.—Minneapolis Journal.

A Terrible Omission.

It was a crisp, cool morning in November, 1944. The faint music of the wind as it rustled through the wings of the flying machine that hung outside the window of Josephine Bunker's boudoir could be distinctly heard, and perhaps it was this sound that awoke the young and beautiful heiress to the fact that the day had already begun.

"Madison," she said as she touched a bell at her bedside and a young woman instantly appeared, "what day is it?"

"It is Tuesday, miss," replied the faithful maid, and as she disappeared again

Josephine blinked her eyes and lay thoughtless and abstracted.

Of all the millionaires who lived in the block Paul Bunker was justly estimated to be the wealthiest, and all the love and devotion of his nature were showered upon his petted and spoiled daughter. Reared in the very lap of luxury, it was not strange that she should at times be forgetful of even the most common duties of life, and so it was that as the maid left her a sudden and horrible sense of something left undone came back to her in all its full force.

Hastily ringing the bell again and summoning the maid, she said with an assumed carelessness that could not, however, conceal her real emotion, "Did you say, Madison, that it was Tuesday?"

"Yes, miss," came the reply.

"You may go, Madison." And then throwing herself back on her pillows, no longer able to control herself, she gave way utterly to the passionate outburst of remorse at the knowledge of the terrible omission she had been guilty of.

"Alas," she sobbed hysterically, "to think that I should have forgotten to register!"—New York World.

STAGE GLINTS.
Thomas W. Keene is at his Staten Island home for the summer.

Much mystery surrounds the plot and subject of Gus Thomas' new play, "New Blood," which is to be produced in August in Chicago.

Manuel Garcia, member of the first opera company heard in New York, is living in London, where he still gives singing lessons. He is 89 years old.

Blanche Marsden's new play, "Dan O'Hara," which is a continuation of Fred Marsden's famous play, "The Kerry Gow," is to be produced next season.

It is said that Frank Daniels was offered a salary and a percentage to originate the comedy part in Fred Miller's comic opera, "Davy Jones," but declined.

John Kernell was arrested for disorderly conduct in Sixth avenue, New York, recently. He escaped spending three months on Blackwell's island by giving bonds.

Charles MacGeachy and Richard Golden are again associated as manager and star and will take "Old Jed Prouty" on a tour of the whole country, state by state and town by town.

Sarah Bernhardt has earned and spent more than any other living actress. In the last 20 years she has earned fully $2,000,000 and circulated it with the extravagance of a princess.

Stone Money In Manila.

The Yaps of Manila use a certain stone as money. Some of the pieces are several feet in diameter and very valuable. If a man goes to the island where this money is found, secures a piece and has the misfortune to lose it on the return voyage, he has only to show a certificate from the maker of the stone money that the Yap really possessed it. This certificate passes as cash.
